

SECRETS OF SUCCESS POOH STICKS TIPS

Five Tips for Glory devised by world family champions Steven Blantz and son Sam:

Big stick beats little stick, but not if it's so big that "it sinks before bobbing to the surface and you lose precious seconds". Go for something a little bit heavier than a pencil.

Choose a straight stick to reduce drag through the water.

Drop the stick vertically to reduce wind resistance as it falls from the bridge – "Those split seconds will make the difference."

Choose well your spot on the bridge – study the current, observe where it's fastest.

When you drop your stick, lean as low as possible over the bridge. But it's a good idea not to fall into the river.

Jessica Blantz (left) at the World Pooh Sticks Championships on the river Windrush in Witney yesterday. Adam Lusher (above) before his defeat at the hands of an infant 10M 11LST0W

Illegal throws, psyching out opponents – it must be Pooh Sticks

Annual competition inspired by AA Milne can be a cruel game – as ADAM LUSHER finds out when he loses to a baby

A glorious summer's day, a small bridge over a slow-moving river: this was my place, my time, my shot at sporting glory. This was Langel Common Bridge on the River Windrush in Witney, Oxfordshire, yesterday, at the World Pooh Sticks Championships.

Sure, there were 799 other competitors. But if I'm to become world champion at anything, why not racing sticks beneath a bridge?

I hoped fate would smile upon me, having already intervened to save the event itself. In January the organisers, the Rotary Club of Oxford Spines, announced that a change in land use meant they could no longer stage the tournament at Little Wittenham on the Thames, where it has been held since 1984.

"We would have hated to let a good tradition go," said Karen Eveleigh, Rotary Club president-elect and chief Pooh Sticks organiser. "But we thought it would be difficult to find somewhere else."

But Cogges Manor Farm heritage centre, neighbouring Langel Common, came to the rescue by suggesting the new venue, and the games were back on.

I came armed with statistics. As chronicled by AA

Milne, when Winnie-the-Pooh accidentally invented Pooh Sticks by tripping over and dropping a fir cone into a river, he tested his theory that big pine cones beat little ones, and: "When he went home for tea, he had won thirty-six and lost twenty-eight."

Being a bear of very little brain, Pooh struggled with the maths, but I had calculated that choosing a big stick over a little one gave you a 0.5625 (or better than 56-50) chance of winning.

And I had a coach – Steven Blantz, who with his wife, Helen, 44, and children Sam, 11, Eve, nine, and Jessica, five, had triumphed in the family category last year.

Cosch Blantz, 44, an IT procurement manager, described the feeling. "You wake up an ordinary Joe Bloggs. You go to bed a world champion. We were in the Oxford Times, the Witney Gazette."

Even better, he imparted his family's five tips for Pooh Sticks glory – but seemed anxious when I suggested the tactics of Zeyore, who had "wanted to tell Tigger how to win at Pooh Sticks, by letting your stick drop in a twitchy sort of way."

"Isn't that flicking your Pooh stick?" he said. "Possibly against the no-throwing rule."

I prepared to psych out my first-heat opponents but discovered I was up against internationals.

Deb Hoffmann, 50, of Waushesha in Wisconsin was the Guinness World Record holder for the largest Winnie-the-Pooh and friends memorabilia collection. She had flown in specially for this.

The Germans, Stefanie and Christian Ernst, with their eight-month-old son Julian, had recently moved from the Black Forest to Witney. (Doubtless for the Pooh Sticks training.)

I dropped my big Pooh stick vertically, and, yes, in a twitchy sort of way. And fate betrayed me. My stick was behind Julian's and Mrs Hoffmann's.

I had lost. To an eight-month-old baby and a woman who won 12. But it wasn't Winnie-the-Pooh memorabilia. Then I had to watch as James Smith, 36, a quantity surveyor, from Long Haddonbury near Witney, with no statistics, no training and no tactics, walked away with the trophy. "I only came here for a nice day out with the family," he said. Pooh Sticks: it's the cruellest game.

DOWNLOAD OUR FREE INDEPENDENT APP
Go to: Independent.co.uk/apps

Virgin media

World's hottest phone.

UK's best price.

New Samsung Galaxy S6 now available on our Freestyle Contracts.

Phone and tariff from just £31 a month. NO UPFRONT FEE.

• Visit a Virgin Media store • virginmedia.com • 0800 952 2236

The monthly price of your handset will be added to your standard. Based on a 24-month consumer credit agreement with Virgin Media Mobile Finance Limited for the phone and a 24-month contract with Virgin Media Mobile Finance Limited. Credit subject to status, credit check and agreement by Virgin Media. UK. Terms and conditions apply. 95% RRP. Representative. Visit virginmedia.com/hotphone for full details. Offer based on the total monthly charge for the length of the contract, at £31 from 2015. All credits are provided through a 3rd party and subject to their contractual terms. From 2015, your Virgin Media mobile phone contract will be adjusted every year or more by the Retail Price Index (RPI) rate of inflation announced in the May before. Virgin Media Mobile Finance Limited is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority (reference no. 1000112). Registered office: Marlow, Bucks. See www.virginmedia.com for details. Virgin Media Mobile Finance is a subsidiary of Virgin Media Group. Please subscribe responsibly. The monthly price includes VAT. Details at virginmedia.com.